In the present study, we have investigated the effect of various calmodulin antagonists on serotonin-activated phosphatidylinositol hydrolysis in bovine adrenal chromaffin cells. None of these compounds was found to be a competitive inhibitor of the effect of the amine; however, trifluoperazine (IC50 = 9 micromM) and N-(6-aminohexyl)-5-chloro-1-naphthalenesulphonamide (IC50 = 26 microM), two potent calmodulin antagonists, were found to be potent inhibitors of the effect of serotonin. Several ionophores, including A23187 and ionomycin, were also found to be potent inhibitors of the effect of serotonin. These results are in good agreement with the calmodulin-binding properties of ionophores and add further support to the idea that calmodulin plays a role in serotonin-activated phosphatidylinositol hydrolysis in chromaffin cells./* Copyright (C) 2002-2005 RealVNC Ltd. Mobile video advertising by Apple and Google is damaging journalism - and it's time to rethink the whole concept of advertising I've been using social media for a decade, and I've come to believe that there is no plausible reason to place a link in a post with an advertising callout on the post itself. This means no Facebook ads, no Tweets, no LinkedIn ads, and certainly no Instagram Ads. That doesn't mean you can't advertise in media - I don't think there's any place for billboards in my life, but I enjoy watching documentaries and content from my favourite brands and I've always accepted that they placed ads when they publish content. But I have limited time and a limited amount of empathy for people like me, so I only watch documentaries about things I really care about. I think this advert is not fit to be shown on social media as a matter of principle The problem, as I see it, is that the advertising models being developed today are of an inappropriate size, and I don't think they fit the needs of our society or our online social life. This is not about what is appropriate or inappropriate. The problem is that our current advertising models create a disconnect between media and advertising. To understand this disconnect one needs to understand that an advert is not just a banner of an image that contains text. It is a form of entertainment and in some cases, a complete and convincing narrative. Its purpose is not just to make a sale, but to be entertaining and it is felt by its audience that it carries with it more of an emotional response than a cursory click on the page. If we're going to allow people to feel, we must allow them to feel together. But the ad on Facebook or the Google
